CONVENTION DATA SERVICES LAUNCHES TEXT MESSAGING PROGRAM FOR EVENTS

(Bourne, MA – December 2009). Convention Data Services (CDS) is launching a text messaging program to provide instant communication between show management and their attendees and exhibitors. Beginning with shows in 2010, CDS will offer clients GuestAssist's Conversations and Community Alerts. These tools use the power of attendees' mobile devices to deliver up-to-the-minute information and bring customer service to new heights by providing live responses to onsite inquiries.

"With 85% of consumers carrying mobile phones, this is a remarkable tool for show management to enhance the show experience for their attendees and exhibitors," says David Lawton, Vice President of Sales and Marketing, Convention Data Services.

Currently, CDS is providing two text-messaging components created by GuestAssist:

- Conversations — a live, interactive service that allows attendees to text questions to the event management team and receive immediate feedback. Event representatives respond to text messages using a web-based interface that tracks, categorizes and archives all text messages from the event.
- Community Alerts — provides text message updates throughout the event directed to specific groups defined by show management; including attendees, exhibitors, staff, vendors and more. Real-time alerts, announcements, changes in schedules and locations, updates and notifications can be sent to targeted groups to inform them of relevant information. Attendees must opt-in to receive alerts.

All attendee information is kept private, and message correspondence is managed from a password protected web site.
